ILLUSTRATION ON DECEIT

The bush pigs are animals that walk in groups. Because of their habit the lion found it difficult to devour them.

One day, one lion thought of a possible way to prey them, and then he went and asked the pigs why they always walked in group. The pigs answered that it was customary for them to walk in groups.

The Lion advised them to desist from that, that it was not good, that it prevents them from accomplishing a lot of things at one time. He further advised them that in order to achieve a lot of things there should be division of labour among them. One of them should be assigned to one duty at a time. If one of them is going to fetch water, another should go for fire wood, and so on.

The bush pigs foolishly accepted the lion's idea and implemented the theory of Division of labour. They shared the various tasks among themselves and they never went in groups any longer as they used to do. Consequently, the Lion had the opportunity to prey on them one after the other and they eventually were completely devoured by the Lion.
