ILLUSTRATION ON BENEVOLENCE

A certain merchant used to sail out on business. Each time he intends to embark on his business trip, every body in his compound tried to bring some goods to be carried by his ship for transaction.

It happened that there was a certain orphan, a little girl also living in the same compound. She had nothing to put in the ship for transaction, but the merchant first daughter had pity on the orphan and bought a very little cat in the name of the orphan and put in the ship.

When the time for departure came, the ship set sail. After some days they reached a certain city, and anchored in order to sell their goods. But the inhabitants of the city said they had everything; their only pressing problem was that they were plagued by rats. They pleaded with the captain of the ship if there is anything that can chase away the rats; they would be very happy and will not hesitate to buy it. At this juncture, the captain went into the ship and brought out the little cat and put it on the ground. Immediately the rats caught a glimpse of the cat, they ran for their lives.

Consequently, the king and people of the city asked the captain to wait for a while that they were ready to pay for the cat. As the captain was waiting, they brought a ship filled to brim with riches and inscribed the orphans name in block letters on both the front and back of the ship as the owner. The captain was told that the ship and everything therein belong to the owner of the little cat. It was the price they paid for it. At last the ship and its contents were brought to the little orphan at home. Everybody was surprised at God's care for the down- trodden and insignificant people.
